Principles of Professional Practice

ICBC members have a professional obligation to clients, prospects, employers, employees, the general public and other members to act competently and ethically at all times. Members are expected to comply with the content and the spirit of the Code of Ethics in order to fulfil this professional obligation.

ICBC members should not misrepresent or overstate their credentials, education, training, experience, or membership status.

ICBC members are expected to refrain from any conduct that would be adverse to the best interest and purpose of ICBC. Members are to be forever vigilant of the importance of their role and to conduct themselves only in the most ethical and professional manner at all times.

I agree to adhere to the Principles of Professional Practice.
